The critical assessment of the two main incriminating documents in support of the 'gas vans' has turned up very little in the line of substantiating their credibility. All we have left now are the statements of eyewitnesses; perhaps an examination of these may yet provide some convincing information.

This lack of knowledge is excusable, because even in orthodox historiography the "gas vans" have played only a minor role. To this date no monograph has appeared on the topic written by a mainstream historian, and the papers published about the topic are dismally superficial and show a total lack of any critical attitude.

Holocaust Handbooks: Santiago Alvarez: 'The Gas Vans'

A gas van or gas wagon (German: Gaswagen) was a vehicle reequipped as a mobile gas chamber. During World War II Nazi Germany used gas vans on a large scale as a extermination method to murder inmates of asylums, Romani people, Jews, and prisoners in occupied Poland, Belarus, and Yugoslavia.

Gas van - Wikipedia

"Gas vans" are usually absent from the discourse. What percentage of the general populace has ever heard that the Nazis are said to have deployed mobile gas chambers as well, which historians usually call "gas vans"? This lack of knowledge is excusable, because even in orthodox historiography the "gas vans" have played only a minor role.

The Gas Vans | CODOH

Gas vans were used, particularly at Chelmo extermination camp, until gas chambers were developed as a more efficient method for killing large numbers of people. There were two types of gas vans in operation, used by the Einsatzgruppen in the East. The Opel-Blitz, weighing 3.5 tons, and the larger Saurenwagen,...

The constants a and b are called van der Waals constants. They have positive values and are characteristic of the individual gas. If a gas behaves ideally, both a and b are zero, and van der Waals equations approaches the ideal gas law PV=nRT. The constant a provides a correction for the intermolecular forces.

Non-ideal gas - Van der Waals equation and constants

Gas vans were regular cargo trucks specially equipped with an air-tight metal cargo compartment. The exhaust system was designed so exhaust gases could be re-directed into the sealed cargo compartment, instead of flowing out the tailpipe and into the air.
